With H5N1 avian influenza (bird flu) now detected on Australian shores, preparedness and early detection are more important than ever.

This workshop will provide an update on the current H5 avian influenza situation in Australia and the NT, including the latest developments, preparedness activities and what an outbreak could mean for land managers and the broader community.

Presenters will discuss current risks, surveillance and response arrangements, and the roles of government, industry, landholders and natural resource managers in protecting the Territory's environmental, agricultural and cultural values.

Hear from biosecurity experts and ecologists, ask questions and discuss practical approaches to strengthening preparedness and supporting a coordinated response to current and future biosecurity threats.
