Senior rangers share practical guidance for keeping culture central in all ranger work.

The Indigenous Rangers Program supports First Nations people to manage Country according to Traditional Owners' aspirations, bringing together Traditional Knowledge, cultural practices and Western science. Today, 320 ranger programs operate across Australia. (NIAA 2026)

As ranger work has expanded to include fire and carbon programs, biosecurity, Learning on Country, cultural heritage, research partnerships and emergency services, the roles and expectations of rangers, coordinators and managers have also grown. Balancing these demands with strong cultural guidance and direction remains an ongoing challenge.

This workshop brings together senior rangers, coordinators and managers to share challenges and practical strategies for keeping cultural priorities central to ranger work. Their insights will contribute to a guide for ranger groups and external agencies on supporting ranger programs in ways that keep cultural values at the centre.
